

Fresno State gets $1.4m science grant

Published online on Tuesday, Sep. 22, 2009

Bee staff

The National Science Foundation has awarded a nearly $1.4 million grant to California State University, Fresno, to provide research opportunities for 24 undergraduates each year in the university's geoscience laboratories.

The grant will be used to create a mentoring and educational program for students of geology, environmental science, hydrology, air quality and atmospheric chemistry, meteorology and climatology.